Jockey Box for NHC

In anticipation of providing beer for the 2014 National Homebrew Competition, an idea was floated to build a more robust jockey box with actual tap handles that can pour six different beers. The members in attendance passed a unanimous vote. Start thinking of designs to discuss.

Homebrew Hoptacular

Our Chili Pepper beer unfortunately did not place in the homebrew hoptacular challenge, though it is tasty.

Christmas Cheer, Holiday's and Beer. I

It's a festive time of year, one where friends and family jam their schedules full of parties and festivals, get together and shop until they drop. Among all the traditions in my house, one remains quite normal: the holidays remind us all that our family is a bit dysfunctional. And I say, what better way to cope with dysfunction than with beer? It's a great escape to brew your own; you can whip up an extract batch on the stove to the dismay of Aunt Betty the prude, or the delight of uncle Jack who... well lets face it, he should have been to rehab several times over but sometimes it is fun to mess with a functioning alcoholic so you let him be. If you cannot stand your family, you can spend your time assembling, disassembling, cleaning, testing or using your garage based brew system. You might be cold, but that's what beer is there to help you with... its better than hearing the same boring old stories from Aunt Sue about your mother's bad habits as a youth. Instead you can concoct your own stories while hopped up on a hoppy seasonal brew, Russian Imperial Stout or a winter warmer that just goes down smooth. Everyone tends to over romanticize the holidays looking for some nostalgic past that is largely fictional what with all that binge drinking you did in college who really could remember anyway... it makes sense that one could streamline the process by throwing all those old thoughts out and concocting a new set in the confines of the home brewery. This could lead to some holiday inspired brew recipes that perhaps shouldn't be tried without a proper bout of experimentation – but it's better than dealing with family like Clark Griswold by covering your house with twinkle lights just to have a nervous breakdown when they don't work. Instead, we should all just relax, not worry, and have a homebrew. In fact, share one with friends along with this wonderful hobby. Give the gift that keeps on Giving as Cousin Eddy says (no, not the jelly of the month club) and give the obsession of home brewing to a friend. Spread your Christmas Cheer 10 IBU's at a time (or 30 for you hop heads). I know I will... this beer is great. Cheers, Elliot.
